

Compliance with Principles of Publication Ethics and Malpractice Statement

For Teologický časopis, which serves as a platform for scholarly dialogue across denominations, ethical principles are an essential means to credibility on the part of contributors and readers alike. We require editors, reviewers, and authors to adhere to the ethical principles listed below which refer to Elsevier's guidelines for a Publication Ethics and Malpractice Statement.

Editors and reviewers

Evaluation of manuscripts submitted for publication in Teologický časopis must be based exclusively on the criterion of quality. The ecumenical nature of the journal obliges editors and reviewers to evaluate submitted studies regardless of the author's denominational affiliation, as well as race, gender, sexual orientation, religious beliefs, ethnicity, citizenship, or political affiliation. Articles with an offensive content will not be accepted for publication.

We require reviewers to disclose to the Editorial Board of Teologický časopis any competing interest that might influence their objective assessment of the manuscript.

Reviewers may be recruited from any academic institution except the one where the author of the article is based, as well as the journal's editorial board. The Editor-in-Chief of Teologický časopis will also ensure that the number of authors from any one institution in a published issue of the journal does not exceed two-thirds of the total number.

If the editor finds that a publication is plagiarized, duplicated, or presents research conducted in a manner that does not take into account the ethical requirements of academic work, it will not be published. If these misconducts are discovered after the text has been published, the editors will consider additional retractions. In the print version of the next issue of the journal, the author and title of the publication will be listed, but instead of the text of the publication, it will be stated that it has been retracted and the reason for this action. In the PDF version, which is available under "Archive" in the main menu, the article will be marked RETRACTED.

The review process is anonymous and follows the principle of double-blind peer review, so that the reviewer does not know the author and vice versa.

If requested by the reviewer, the Editor-in-Chief of Teologický časopis will arrange communication between the author and the reviewer during the review process. The reviewer may invite a colleague who is an expert in the area of research for a more objective assessment of the matter.

Neither the editors nor reviewers may give information about articles under review without the express permission of the author.

Original ideas contained in a peer-reviewed article must not be misused for personal academic benefit of the editor or reviewer.

Authors

Articles submitted for publication in Teologický časopis must result from the author's personal research, and any other material must be properly acknowledged in citations.

Articles should present the author's original views in the context of ongoing scholarly discussion and should clearly articulate the contribution of the published views to the scholarly debate.

If the original ideas in the article are the result of research under a grant, it should be clearly stated what the project is and who awarded the research grant.

If the author of an article finds, after submission, that it contains a serious error or inaccuracy, it is the author's responsibility to contact a member of the Editorial Board to discuss the possibility of correcting or withdrawing the article.

An article submitted to the journal cannot simultaneously be submitted to another journal or any other collection of academic papers. If the reviewer or editor discovers such misconduct, they will contact the Editor-in-Chief of Teologický časopis who will request an explanation from both the author and the editor of the publication where the paper was published.

Appeal

If the author disagrees with the editor's decision, he or she may appeal. In such a case, he or she must respond to the editor's comments and provide new information to make it clear that the request is justified. If the author believes that the reviewer's decision is the result of a conflict of interest, he or she must submit evidence of this. The Editorial Board of the journal will consider the validity of the request and make a decision. This decision of the Editorial Board is final and the author cannot appeal further.

If anyone has a reasonable suspicion of influencing the publication of a paper or the review process related to it, please report it to the email address of the journal's Editor-in-Chief: jozef.tino@truni.sk

Copyright and licensing information

Copyright on all articles which have been accepted for publication by the editors are transferred to the publisher of Teologický časopis i.e. to Theological Faculty of University of Trnava. Accepted articles shall be licensed under the Creative Commons license (CC BY 4.0) which means that the publisher grant users the right to unrestricted dissemination and re-use of their work, provided that the original authorship of the articles is acknowledged.

Advertising and Direct Marketing

As the journal is freely available on the website, there is no need for marketing for sales. Hard copies are freely distributed to the authors of the articles. The Editorial Board does not encourage promotion of the journal, but when it is done in traditional media or on social media, we insist that it be truthful, unbiased information.